I am Sgt. Steve Gudelj of the San Francisco Police Department. I have been a police officer for 24 years. I am presently assigned to the Special Investigations Division of the San Francisco Police Department. I have conducted over 1000 investigations into criminal cases and I have participated in over 100 searches pursuant to search warrants.

I conducted the search of Thomas Gerard's residence which is a houseboat located at [REDACTED], [REDACTED] in Sausalito, California. In connection with this search I spoke to Julie Gerard, the person in residence at that location who told me that she is Thomas Gerard's wife and that they have a storage locker which she showed me.

The locker she showed me is located at [REDACTED] Sausalito, California which is on the [REDACTED] side of the [REDACTED] Shipyard, just [REDACTED] of a business called [REDACTED], off of a road that runs [REDACTED] and it is the [REDACTED] from the road and is a [REDACTED] on [REDACTED] in gray tar paper with [REDACTED] door, bearing a [REDACTED] sign that says "[REDACTED]" and it has a radio antenna on the [REDACTED] side of the shed.

I have read the accompanying affidavit, its exhibits and the search warrant issued by Judge Louie and I believe them to be true and I have attached a copy hereto as Exhibit 1.

1 Based on the affidavit and its exhibits I believe that the
2 items described in the attached Exhibit 1 are located at this
3 storage shed and I request an additional search warrant for 4 that location.

Suspect in cop spy case tells his story

Tom Gerard, former S.F. cop and CIA agent, fled to the Philippines.

Tom Gerard, suspected of selling police secrets, says FBI spy probe a 'witch hunt'

By Phil Bronstein

Tom Gerard, the former San Francisco police officer and CIA agent accused of selling law enforcement secrets to foreign powers, says he's the target of "the biggest witch hunt and wild goose chase I've ever seen."

The investigation originated with the FBI and now involves "friends and guys I've worked with (in the SFPD) for 25 years," Gerard said in an exclusive, sometimes tearful, interview with The Examiner from his hideaway in the Philippines.

"The sons of bitches are trying to put me in prison for the rest of my life," he said. "That's why I decided to leave this country. As long as I sit here, they can't get me."

Gerard says he believes that the FBI's loss of a file on the Black Muslim organization may be motivating the case against him, but that he is innocent of any crime involving the sale of information.

Telephone wiretaps may show him talking about sharing police data with informants, investigators or even foreign consulates, Gerard admits. Still, he says, he has only done what he thought appropriate for a police officer.

Other factors have forced him into the unaccustomed role as chief suspect — and out of the country, he says.

"What they're (the FBI) thinking is they've got someone inside their own organization" giving out files, charged Gerard, who suddenly fled to the Philippines and turned in his retirement papers at age 60 after being questioned by the FBI.

"They really took me on too hard in the beginning," the obviously agitated ex-officer said. "First thing they said right out of their mouth is you better be prepared for a lifestyle change unless you cooperate with us, and we're

CAST OF CHARACTERS

Tom Gerrard

A well-regarded prosecutor, he spent three years as a bench reporter in Gerrard's office, then transferred to the San Francisco Police Department and was assigned to the re-operations unit. Gerrard, 50, retired and left the industry in November after being subpoenaed for investigation by the FBI.

Roy Bullock

Founded 40 years ago to help anti-Germans in the form of the ADL from neo-Nazi members to the Ku Klux Klan. Sources said the group had paid Roy Bullock to investigate neo-Nazi groups.

San Francisco police intelligence unit

Formerly to work with foreign consulates and to investigate domestic crimes, was a logging tool for criticism from one informant, who said it would not report news by language groups that protested but committed no crimes. The unit was created in 1981 by then-Chief Frank Jordan.

Federal Bureau of Investigation

The top U.S. law enforcement agency is responsible for investigating all federal crimes, including espionage. Gerrard said the FBI had exchanged information with him and used Bullock as an informant. The Bureau is now investigating the case.

"I could go to the FBI office and talk to people there on occasion," he said. "The logical assumption would be that somehow the report came from me because I have that access. That's what they're hellbent about. But it never happened. Just never did that."

A Walk from the West

The case took a sharp turn when FBI agents visited Gerrard at the Hall of Justice late last year. The ex-CIA agent and cop did not react, well to what he says were threats of jail.

"It got very nasty in the beginning," he said. "Things didn't go very far. I said, 'I've got nothing to say.'"

The agents "wanted to know what I did in the CIA," he said. "I told them. If you've got a big internal investigation going on, you can just pick up the phone and talk to the CIA. Don't ask me ask them."

Gerrard also knew that agents were interviewing his friends and colleagues. "They wanted to know things like my foreign bank accounts. What foreign bank accounts? I have one bank account in the Philippines with $1,000 in it. I don't have two pennies to rub together."

thing through my name. I've taken a long to think who and I meet with, who did I talk to. I'm liable to have met with somebody and the guy could have been a South African and I didn't know it. But conspiracy to what they say, there's no money involved in this."

The search warrant affidavit, which must state details of the case against Gerrard, was issued by court order.

Investigating Bullock to FBI

There are numerous rumors in the case, Gerrard says, other than just a cop on the lam from the law. When the SFPD intelligence unit closed down, Gerrard says, he took Bullock to the local FBI office. "We sat down, I turned the file over to them. I introduced them. I told (the FBI) the things we were working on, the things we had going and so forth," he said. "And they started using (Bullock) and they were paying him."

When Bullock called Gerrard for assistance with information after that, "I would gladly assist him."

After all, Gerrard said, "I look like a nutcase (Bullock) to them and turned the information over to them."

The FBI agent Gerrard says he dealt with refused to comment.

Gerrard says he believes the FBI was unable to get enough evidence against him to justify a search warrant from a federal judge, so the San Francisco district attorney's office sent a subpoena to Gerrard to serve a warrant on any books, so they put the guys I worked with and my friends for 25 years up to doing it," Gerrard said.

The warrant was served and the search done by San Francisco police and district attorney's investigators.

"The FBI told the locals a bill of goods," Gerrard contended. "They told the chief of police that Tom Gerrard is John Dillinger."

Gerrard speculates that the investigation may also be fueled by historic friction between the FBI and CIA, or even a heated argument several years ago between an FBI official and an executive of the ADL's national office. But whatever it is, evidence or reality, Gerrard says, he's convinced (the FBI) has decided to "take back" him.

In conversations with friends over the years, Gerrard has spoken of returning to the Philippines. His former boss on an annual overseas trip made some of the country's most powerful politicians.

But the life of a fugitive is a what he had to make.

"It was the hardest couple weeks here before Christmas, but here by myself," Gerrard said. The Philippines, his voice breaks. "My life, my family, everything just hanging in the balance here

The Examiner: "The FBI also 'asked about my mistakes,'" Gerrard said. "What mistakes? They wanted to know about gun-running on Philippine Airlines. What gun-running? I worked for Philippine Airlines as a secretary guy."

For years, Gerrard supplemented his SFPD salary with moonlighting as a private investigator in the Philippines. He worked at San Francisco International Airport. Through that job, he met Philippine officials and took an annual vacation in the Philippines.

The investigation reached a low point, according to Gerrard, when agents asked his friends about an ADL-sponsored trip to Laredo he went on last year.

"My friend said that when I went to Laredo," he said, "I was really in touch with Masanda (an ancient fortress in Laredo, where Jewish spies committed mass suicide in 72 A.D.; ruler) than he captured by a much larger Roman force."

"(The agents said) 'Obl Masanda. He met with Israeli intelligence?' My friend tried to tell them, no, it was Masanda."

talking 10 or 15 years."
"I'm absolutely terrified," Gerard said. "These guys have decided for whatever reason that I'm the bad guy, the happy man."
The FBI has concluded it is investigating Gerard but declined to comment on the case.
Gerard fled to Palermo, a remote island in the central Philippines, following his abrupt departure in November from the San Francisco Public Department. He left his wife and child at the family's San Mateo home. There is no extradition treaty between the United States and the Philippines.
The Massachusetts-born Gerard had served in the department for almost a quarter century — with a three-year hiatus to serve as a contract CIA employee in Central America.

The Examiner reported last Friday that the FBI and San Francisco authorities believed Gerard had made thousands of dollars selling secret law enforcement information to foreign agents.
Israel and South Africa have been mentioned by knowledgeable sources as possible recipients of that information.
As an inspector in the now-defunct SFPD intelligence unit, Gerard investigated and maintained files on Arab American organizations, right-wing groups and other political activities. As part of that position, Gerard says, he established ongoing contact with groups and individuals who also gathered such information.

The investigation has raised questions about intelligence-gathering both by law enforcement agencies and private organizations. Details of the case — even just Gerard's version of events — provide a rare glimpse into the shrouded and interlocking world of informants, cops, foreign governments, the watched and the watchers.

Cop and informant:
A key to the case, Gerard believes, is a random, self-styled private investigator named Roy Bullock, whom he introduced to the FBI. Gerard says Bullock was an informant and fringed with whom he shared law enforcement information.

In 1985, when Gerard joined the SFPD after his CIA employment, he moved into the intelligence unit, he says. Bullock during a visit to the local offices of the Arab Delegation League of Brian Brill, he says.

Bullock was a paid investigator for the ADL, says Gerard, and the two men shared a professional interest in gathering intelligence on right-wing extremists and Arab American groups, particularly those they thought had ties to Middle East Palestinian organizations the U.S. government had characterized as "terrorist."

"We sat there one morning with everyone in the (ADL) office, took hands and made friends," Gerard said.

Bullock — called "Cal" by Gerard, a short version of his nickname "Calzone" — proved his value soon after in the case of Cory Ray Phelps, a deranged neo-Nazi suspect of bombing synagogues and black studies classrooms.
Phelps was caught, Gerard said, because of "a file that came from Cal. That's how we got the SOB (Phelps). Not from any police or FBI work but from Cal. The guy is really dynamite."

Gerard began cooperating with Bullock and arranging information because "the guy had no (criminal) record. It's like we're talking to someone in the neighborhood community watch organization." The information, Gerard said, he secured, was for the ADL files.

Bullock declined to comment. When local authorities searched Gerard's house on Dec. 10 and served a search warrant for Bullock's residence, they also obtained a warrant for the San Francisco and Los Angeles offices of the ADL, looking for law enforcement materials. Some police data was found at the ADL, according to sources familiar with the case. But an attorney for the ADL said the organization had been told that it was not a target or suspect of the investigation. He also said the ADL had abstained voluntarily to the search and that the warrants had not been served. He declined to say if Bullock was an ADL informant.

The South African connection:
Gerard's explanation of any possible South African connection involves a 1986 encounter in Las Vegas that Bullock conducted. "This looked like a legitimate investment seminar," Gerard said,

"The guest speaker was going to be South African consul general (in Las Vegas). But we found out the people behind it were a bunch of right-wingers. Cal told me, I'm in charge of the people at the seminar and were then (then) this would probably be an extension to the consul general if he was to appear. That's it."
Gerard says "all he received for this, he calls 'a (police) deputy protection function' was a book of color photos from South Africa and a cassette thank-you note.

But Gerard concedes that he had an SFPD undercover badge and medals to communicate with the South African.
"We just couldn't do it up front and legally because the Board of Supervisors said we couldn't have any contact with the South African," he said.
The FBI, which monitors foreign consultants, clearly knew about the contact, Gerard says. On a visit to the San Francisco FBI office a few years later, agents there kidded him about his "phony (undercover) name making it on the National Security Index."

After the current investigation began and before he left the country, Gerard says, he spoke with Bullock. "Cal" had apparently maintained contact with the South African, according to Gerard.
"Cal told me he had told the FBI guys that he'd met with the South African a year ago and offered to identify photographs for them," possibly of Black Muslims, Gerard says.

Gerard said "a private citizen," Bullock "is a real smart guy." Gerard said "he can make wild anyone he wants."
Gerard also says Bullock had asked him to run identification checks on three names, two of them aliases and the third a possible Black Muslim. All three, according to Gerard, were described by Bullock as possibly being threats. At least in one case, the Los Angeles ADL office was a potential target, Gerard says.

Through his own contacts, Gerard says, he's heard that an FBI file on Black Muslims may have been sold to South Africa.
Gerard believes the telephone wiring information obtained by the FBI may include his own conversations with Bullock about providing "Cal" the data on the Black Muslim end of the situation.

"There's nothing really sinister about talking to an informant about information like that," Gerard said. "I educated them on why that I did that. But there's got to be a very telling line that."
The FBI, Gerard speculates, was "hazy" about being a fit from their offices and assumed the SFPD intelligence specialist was involved.
